Spring 2021

Dear friends of the Deutscher Kunstverlag, Dear readers,

Did you know that the Deutscher Kunstverlag celebrates its 100th anniversary in 2021? Since 1921, we have been publishing books that take our readers into the diverse world of art and architecture. Join us in our anniversary year to the reopened New National Gallery in Berlin, the Mozart Festival in Würzburg, or the collection of German paintings in Frankfurt's Städel Museum. Learn more about art in architecture, international modernism in the GDR, or partisan photography in former Yugoslavia.

We would also like to invite you to celebrate our anniversary together with us. You can find out everything about the planned lectures, competitions and other anniversary events on our new website.

The Neue Nationalgalerie, which was erected in 1965–68, is the only building by the architect Ludwig Mies van der Rohe in Germany from after the Second World War. With its steel roof over the glass-walled exhibition hall and its reduced design vocabulary, it is regarded as an icon of modernism and as the legacy of a visionary master builder. Following the restoration by the firm David Chipperfield Architects, the Neue Nationalgalerie is reopening with new glory in 2021. With numerous specialist texts and large-format photographs, the book focuses on the architecture of the museum in three thematic groups: the historical building, the fundamental restoration, and the renovated building. Detailed and large-format photographs heighten awareness of the unique architecture, which Mies van der Rohe designed down to the smallest detail.

Mozart's music and he as an individual continue to fascinate visual artists today. On the occasion of the 100-year anniversary of the Mozart Festival in Würzburg, an exhibition at the Martin von Wagner Museum takes a look at this long history of his impact. In addition to original documents and objects relating to Mozart, circa sixty artworks – by Chagall, Klee, and Slevogt among other artists – span an arc of portraits and monuments that have defined the image of the composer in the long term, from stage sets for The Magic Flute to abstract painting.

The exhibition focuses on the creative energies that Mozart's work has released and the change in the presentation of popular opera scenes and figures since the early 19th century, to reflecting on principles of composition in the 20th century and the present.

The collection catalogue is dedicated to a hitherto barely explored part of the holdings of the Städel Museum. All the works have been examined in detail from the perspective of both art history and painting technology based on the most recent scientific methods. The incorporation of the respective cultural-historical background gives rise to new insights regarding the creation, attribution, identification, or interpretation of the individual paintings. The overview provides fascinating insights into the history of the collection, exhibitions, and research, and opens up a panorama of multi-layered art production in early modern Germany.

Exhibition

Martin von Wagner Museum, Gemäldegalerie, Würzburg
October 31st, 2020 to January 31st, 2021

Giambattista Tiepolo (1696–1770) created his world-renowned frescoes in the Würzburg Residence between 1750 and 1753. On the occasion of the 250th anniversary of his death, the Martin von Wagner Museum, which is housed in the Residence, is presenting drawings, etchings, and paintings by Tiepolo, including numerous works from his immediate sphere of activity in Würzburg: sketched notes by his son, Giandomenico, and traced copies by his most important employee, Georg Anton Urlaub.

The works presented come primarily from the holdings of the university museum, and are supplemented by international loans.

Fascinating and intensive in color: the most important artistic topics of Alexej Jawlensky—a painter with an unmistakable, expressive style—discussed in depth and presented with a wealth of images

Exhibition

As a central artist of early modernism, Alexej von Jawlensky (born in Torshok, Russia, in 1864, died in Wiesbaden in 1941) considerably expanded the possibilities of painting. Based on an expressive, colorful appropriation of the world, by reducing form and intensifying color, he made his pictures an expression of an immaterial and spiritual truth. Despite the great individuality of his path, his work continues to give important inspirations to painting until today with respect to color, the serial, and the spiritual. The exhibition and catalogue present an exemplary selection of some seventy paintings and drawings and trace the development of the three big topics of "face, landscape, and still life" to which Jawlensky dedicated himself in his work.

The Belgian painter and graphic artist James Ensor (1860–1949) has a special place in the history of the art of the twentieth century. Categorized as a “painter of masks,” he styled himself as an individualist and outsider, but was also a harbinger and generator of impulses for future generations. The publication accompanying the exhibition at the Kunsthalle Mannheim focuses on the fate of one picture, Masks and Death of 1897, which was once part of the collection, was seized by the National Socialists in 1937 and is found today at the Musée des Beaux-Arts in Liège. Grouped around this work and the picture Still Life with Rooster, which was acquired as a replacement in the 1950s, are numerous other works dealing with the set of motifs of “self-portrait—mask—death—still life,” and show how closely interwoven these topics are in Ensor’s oeuvre.

Building-related art commissioned by the state brings politics, society, architecture, and urban design together in a unique way. In the GDR, it was initially given the function of propagating political contents and idealized images of society. Artists increasingly emancipated themselves from government guidelines and developed their own forms of expression in interplay with their surroundings. Until today, many people identify numerous artworks with their home. The publication documents the symposium "Building-related Art in the GDR" on the occasion of the anniversary "70 years of building-related art in Germany" in 2020. Renowned experts examine building-related art in the GDR from the perspective of aesthetics and contents and discuss this internationally unique stock of artworks in detail.

ANKUNFT IM ALLTAG DER MODERNE:
Mit den neuen Bauaufgaben und vor dem Hintergrund eines gewandelten Konzentrationszentrums am Reichstag und der Stalinallee entfalteten sich auch das Verhältnis von Architektur und Raum zu den Menschen. Der Übergang von der Bevölkerung der nationalen Tradition im Zug der Industrialisierung des Bauwesens nach 1950 bis zur sozialistischen Raumplanung und sozialstaatlichen Straßen und plazierter Plätze in Ost-Berlin und den entsprechenden Übergang zum Bau einer sozialistischen Sozialrepublik (DDR)-Neustadt. Begegnungen mit der Modernisierung und sozialstaatlichen Umgestaltung des Zentrums und der Außenbezirke der Stadt in den 1960er und 1970er Jahren erforderte die architektonische Gestaltung eines neuen Aufgabengebiets: Architektur, Städtebau und bildende Künste waren als Berührfelder und Arbeitsschwerpunkte der gesamten Kultur und forderten auf neue Weise Interagierens. Als Beispiel für die sozialstaatliche Raumplanung und -gestaltung kann die Idee Hermann Huppenmann für das Zentrum der neuen Hauptstadt aus dem Jahr 1959 gelten (Abb. 25). In diesem Entwurf wurde das Verhältnis von Architektur, Städtebau und bildender Kunst als zentrale Einheit gesehen.

Architekt öffnete den Denk- und Gestaltungsräumen, indem er sie als Künstler Raum und bauende Kultur verstand. Die sozialstaatlichen Raumplanungen als Höhendemontage sollten nicht wie bei daho geblieben, Marx Engelhardt schlugen stattdessen eine Verbindung am Haupteingang vorgeschlagen werden, um dem sozialen Raum einen zentralen Platz zu verschaffen. Diese Vorschläge sollten die Funktion der Höhendemontage überwinden und die Erreichbarkeit am Ende der Stigale vor - einen aufwendigen, aber auf Ausdruck und Pracht ausgelegten Anfangsaufzug des Kommunistischen Manifests im Stile des sozialistischen Realismus. Der Entwurf als Tribüne diente sollte Revolutionäre Idee und wissenschaftlich sozialistische Fortschritte selbst in den sozialen und politischen Prozessen der sozialstaatlichen Machteroberung dominierten! Das Architekturentwurf von Huppenmann jenseits der Spree eingeschlossen werden, bei bestehender Funktion des Parlaments und konstituierender Funktion des Palastes der Nationen und der Städtebau für das Leute und Bürgerszenario Entwurf für den Sonnenpalast in Moskau (1936) und der sozialstaatlichen Raumplanung, das am Marx-Engels-Platz geplante Pariser Institut, als die Mutter der Traditionen sollte das erhöhte Portal des Berliner Schlosses als Hauptzugang integriert werden, von dem aus die gesamte Neustadt ausgerichtet. 1954 die sozialistische Republik verkündet. Auch der Norden Berlins von früheren Städten und Siedlungen der DDR war in Berlin wieder sprach alles anders realisiert, aber ebenso wie die gesamten sozialstaatlichen Raumplanungen der DDR. Der Fernsehturm, 1969, nicht mehr als Dokument, sondern als Zeichen der sozialstaatlichen Sozialrepublik übernommen, wurde aber Richtung Westen ausgerichtet. Der Entwurf am Schlossplatz wurde 1964 zum Nationaldenkmal erklärt und geschützt. Das andere Gebäude und die Marx-Engels-Denkmal rauschten die Plätze, das sozialstaatliche Raumplanung und -gestaltung als Palast der Republik, 1970, auf der Spreeinsel zwischen den beiden Flüssen und dem Wasser der Spree eingebettet. 1989 als maroden Zweckbau als Pendant zum Fernsehturm im großen Stadtraum errichtet. Das Bildprogramm ist noch Anfang der 1990er Jahre in den 1980er Jahren entstanden, zeigt die Doppelgesichter ihrer Jahr das naiv, das sozialstaatliche Projekt orientierte Bildprogramm und das sozialstaatliche Raumplanung mit dem Wert (Helden) verkörperten Feste stand den sozialstaatlichen Raumplanung und -gestaltung im Beratungsraum des Stadtrates gegenüber (Abb. 26).

In 1950, the obligatory participation of visual artists in state building measures at home and abroad was decreed in the German Bundestag as well as in the parliament of the GDR. Over a period of 70 years, numerous artworks that reflect the politics, society, and architecture as well as the tasks of institutions have been created. The book sheds light on the significance and potentials of building-related art for state authorities and institutions, research institutes, military facilities, and German representation around the world. It discusses its specific aspects, like the creation of the works, as well as their maintenance and preservation, and elucidates how close building-related art can be to day-to-day life—as inspiration, statement, and national visiting card that adds value to architecture.

In addition to his collection of contemporary painting, Ludwig I, who established the Neue Pinakothek, also purchased sculptures by important sculptors like Antonio Canova and Bertel Thorvaldsen. They were supplemented with many busts by sculptors such as Christian Daniel Rauch and Friedrich Tieck, which were originally intended for the Walhalla or the Ruhmeshalle (Pantheon). The king also had Johann Halbig create portraits of numerous poets and painters from whom he had already acquired paintings. All of these sculptures from the collection have now been assessed from a scholarly perspective for the first time. The catalog on the collection of all the sculpture holdings of the nineteenth century at the Neue Pinakothek presents the works in new color photographs and sheds light on the context of their creation.

Adolf von Hildebrand is regarded as one of the most important sculptors in Germany around 1900. He created his works between the era of the Prince Regent in Munich and the enthusiasm for Italy of German Romans. He liberated the sculpture of the nineteenth century from superfluous decoration and thus became a pioneer of modern sculpture in Germany. Works by the artist were already acquired for the collection at an early point in time and were able to grow to become unique holdings of over 200 works as a result of the acquisition of his workshop estate. Besides completed works, the estate also includes models for ideal sculptures, reliefs, portraits, fountains, monuments, and tombs. In the catalog, the works by Fabian Pius Huber are documented in detail for the first time and put in relation to the artist's oeuvre and his era.

Art develops its effect through contemplation. Even before we interpret it, we grasp it by means of inspired seeing, by "feeling our way," thus giving rise to an opinion. It precedes an interpretation of the content—and the interplay of form and content becomes the experience of art. Unlike classic guidebooks, this publication is dedicated to the aesthetic experience, which the comparative contemplation and presentation of masterpieces from the Gemäldegalerie and Bode Museum focuses on beyond the boundaries of art forms. The sensual experience of art via forms, surfaces, materiality, movement, and their significance is curated for readers based on some fifty selected works over various epochs and clearly communicated in numerous close-up photographs.

*The Jan and Friederike Baechle Collection: a wonderful gift of twenty-seven works
 from the nineteenth century to the Museum Wiesbaden, including two important works by Ernst Wilhelm Nay*

Jan and Friederike Baechle describe their collection with the words "small but excellent." They thus describe the core aspect of the collection that they have carefully developed over decades. The "long 19th century" with all its various facets was central to their interest as collectors. The list of the artists who produced the thirty works includes significant positions in the art of the 19th century, and as a gift to the Museum Wiesbaden represent an ideal addition to the existing holdings and a further stroke of luck within the context of a planned "gallery of the 19th century." The opulently illustrated book juxtaposes the works from the Baechle donation to a selection of works from the museums collection, including works by Eugen Bracht, Ferdinand Brütt, Karl Hofer, Max Liebermann, Alfred N. Vivid presentation of the history of selected pictures from the Wallraf-Richartz Museum in Cologne

Pictures often tell stories. But pictures also have a story themselves when they have passed through many hands on their way into a museum.

The author, who supports his views with the results of relevant provenance research, goes on a search for traces of these descriptions of the lives of artworks from the Wallraf-Richartz Museum in Cologne: the city of Cologne thus had to litigate against the daughter of Hermann Göring for nineteen years in connection with a painting by Cranach; a high price had to be paid for the acquisition of another painting because it was not wanted as a gift; and a courageous museum director made his acquisitions of art despite great resistance.

In this book for all museum visitors and readers who would like to learn more about the exhibits, the stories behind the pictures come to life.

Detailed presentation of the discourses surrounding the relevance of media for art history

From interdisciplinary perspectives of archeology, art history, and media studies

Researching and teaching art history is very closely intermeshed with the history of media. Digitization has thus given rise to new perspectives. Against this backdrop, the book takes a differentiated look at the range of media for teaching art history by interrogating the premises and the boundaries media practice in connection with art history. Case studies are dedicated to the different media and how they are used for producing knowledge within art history.

Essays by Matthias Bruhn, Philipp Goldbach, Erkki Huhtamo, Joseph Imorde, Rossella Monaco, Hubert Locher, Maria Männig, Susanne Müller-Bechtel, Robert S. Nelson et al.

The Kunstsammlung Nordrhein-Westfalen is regarded as one of the most important German collections of modern and contemporary art. Since it was established in 1961, the history of its development is situated in the middle of the economic miracle and thus in the interplay between cultural renewal and restoration, representing a new understanding of the state, and becoming reintegrated in the international alliance of nations. The author examines the development of the collection until it was finally consolidated at the end of the 1960s. She takes a look at the life and impact of the founding director Werner Schmalenbach—his childhood and early adulthood in Switzerland, his encounter with “degenerate art,” and his role as a trailblazer for modern art in the young Federal Republic.

The architecture of the interwar period is still often described solely with terms such as classical modernism, Neues Bauen, or the International Style. But, for some time, there have also been calls to expand the perspective and to consider modernism in a more differentiated way. The 100-year anniversary of the Bauhaus provides an occasion to take a critical look at the architecture of modernism and to discuss the concept of multiple modernisms. The texts describe the Bauhaus between self-presentation and perception from

The works of Valentin Serov (1865–1911) mark the beginning of modern Russian painting. He presented them at the Secession in Munich, Berlin, and Vienna, and at the World Fair and Salon d'Automne in Paris as well as at the Venice Biennial and the International Exhibition in Rome. He was involved in the progressive magazine Mir iskusstva and later enjoyed success as a stage designer for the Ballets Russes, along with its founder, Diaghilev.

At the art academy in Moscow, he taught Petrov-Vodkin, Sapunov, Sary-

In the German Democratic Republic (GDR), the art of the ruling party was seen as a weapon in the class struggle. The program of "socialist realism" was institutionally anchored and adherence to it monitored. But the art was older than the state, and there were artists who insisted on the independence of their work. Some of them had been trained prior to 1933, and others in Berlin (West) in the 1950s. Some were recognized internationally, and many emigrated.

In the ongoing debates surrounding art in the GDR, what is also reflected is the shifting relationship between the state party and the international West. It ranged from a demonizing of modernity to a socialist interpretation and reluctant broadening of the canon to the task of party doctrine shortly before the fall of the Berlin Wall.

Davor Konjikušić provides an in-depth presentation and contextualization of the photographs created by Yugoslav partisans between 1941 and 1945. In doing so, the author is not only interested in presenting the photographs from an aesthetic perspective, but in the history of their use and function within one of the biggest anti-fascist movements in Europe during the Second World War.

With the help of the photographs, he traces the development of a movement that—seemingly doomed to certain failure—nevertheless survived the most destructive war in human history.

This book provides new answers to the question of the role of the medium of photography and its significance and use in social movements.

The unusual technique of wood reliefs, in which a hybrid of painting and sculpture is created

The sensual and simultaneously conceptual visual creations of the Berlin-based painter and sculptor Detlef Waschkau generate space and inter-space between mediums and materials. He juggles with contradictions, the hardness of wood, the delicacy of painting, figuration and abstraction, harmony and dissonance, thereflectivity of light, and space and color.

The artistic home of the Berlin-based artists is life in metropolises, the never-resting organism of big cities, seas of buildings, urban canyons, asphalt, and big city jungle. For Detlef Waschkau, the city is a grand stage. In the exhibition publication, New York, Beijing, and Berlin come together—dense street chaos, everything colliding: a picture of the everyday confrontation of people and city.

A book project that spans the border between art and literature, drawing and writing

The author skirts the border between visual arts and literature

Is there—comparable to perfect pitch in hearing—such a thing as the perfect gaze? Does there exist a sense of line and form that has been refined to the highest degree? Using only pencil and paper, Johannes Beyerle turns his gaze to a world of images, tracing remembered, imagined and directly experienced scenes. Two forms of expression are intertwined: drawing and writing. A series of pencil drawings forms the basis; sparse landscape fragments, delicate portraits, and roughly hewn figures are interwoven with handwritten notes. This interpenetration of drawing and writing manifests a unique kind of artistic forensics. The project has become a “novel of signs”: Beyerle reveals a world in which nothing is required but an alert eye, a pencil and a blank sheet of paper.

Today, CalArts is the cradle of many Academy Award and Pulitzer Prize winners, of Mellon and Guggenheim Fellows – a hotspot of American creativity. In personal conversations with Jörn Jacob Rohwer, Lavine tells his life story for the first time, talking about cultural politics, philanthropy, the avant-garde and Los Angeles at the centre of his life. Discussion of the concept of parody from the perspective of art history

Agonality in the arts

Starting in the Renaissance, artists were bound to a canon of exemplary motifs and forms, something that again and again provoked counter-reactions. Methods parodying pictures could be used as an intrinsic artistic critique of authorities and aesthetic norms and to articulate claims to autonomy and status. Even though such counter-images were very much present in the early modern period, they have hitherto only rarely been a focus of research.

This volume addresses this desideratum. The case studies make a contribution to understanding pre-modern picture parodies from the perspectives of art history, literary studies, and visual culture by shedding light on their use in discourses on modernization and in specific conflict situations.

New assessment of the stories of Genesis in the Chiostro Verde (Green Cloister) in the Santa Maria Novella

Colors (respectively green) regarded as a holistic experience in the early modern era

The study's main focus is a particular group of virtually one-color wall paintings with sacred subjects from the 14th and 15th century in Italy, whose reduction of color cannot be explained by the intention to evoke material. Besides early examples executed in shades of ochre, most wall paintings of this genre are green. Based on precise case studies and an extensive catalogue, the author sheds light for the first time on the content-related depth of the phenomenon by providing new insights into the semantics of color and material.

The massive dissemination of this form of monochrome painting can moreover be situated with respect to the history of faith and church politics thanks to the incorporation of picture cycles that have hitherto been neglected or are unknown.

Art-historical reinterpretation of Bernini's Cappella Albertoni in Rome

First incorporation of the rhetoric of the 17th century and Baroque theater before the backdrop of the Copernican revolution and the Counter Reformation

The author interprets the drapery of Gianlorenzo Bernini's Cappella Albertoni for the first time as a curtain—leitmotif in Bernini's sculptural oeuvre—and as an overt figure of speech before the backdrop of the Counter Reformation and of Bruno and Galilei's "open vault of the sky". The curtain falls so as to be opened, as on the Baroque stage, and like the "metaphorical curtain" in theories of poetry of the 17th century, is linked with the eventually induced affect of ecstasy. Metaphors reinterpret the unambiguous as the ambiguous.

The mystical therefore becomes poetic ecstasy. No biographical narrative is hence provided; it is instead about a declaration of belief in an art that liberates the creative powers of the intellect by means of aesthetic experience rather than by linking it to perception.

A new book in the bestselling series

A particularly magnificent genre among archeological finds

Neck rings—status symbols of prehistoric times

Neck rings are among the most magnificent genres among archeological finds. They are made of bronze, silver, or gold, elaborately produced, and richly ornamented. In prehistoric times, they were worn by selected men, women, and children, represented the status and dignity of the wearer, and distinguished the individual within his or her society. In Central Europe, there are neck rings starting from the beginning of the Bronze Age around 2200 BCE. They are found up to the Migration Period around 500 CE, and in the case of the inhabitants near the Baltic Sea even until into the tenth and eleventh century. This book presents, describes, and portrays the typical individual forms. It also provides information about the dating and distribution of the forms as well as additional details.

Only a few fossilized bones and footprints remain from the dinosaurs. Nevertheless, you can see them alive in the children's room and on the cinema screen - everyone apparently knows what they looked like. Where do these images of the primeval lizards and other fossil-based creatures come from? This volume examines the previously unwritten art history of dinosaur painting. It provides clear and surprising analyzes of the history as well as the current status of the so-called Paleoart.
