Dear Friends and Readers,

You are all familiar with the Deutscher Kunstverlag logo.

It was first introduced in 1925, shortly after the founding of the publishing house. Designed by commercial artist Ernst Böhm, it shows an abstract version of the canopy protecting the Gepa statue in Naumburg Cathedral.

It has been minimally revised several times over the last 100 years, most recently in 2020, when a contemporary, colored background was added. The purpose of the logo is to make our publishing house recognizable while also reflecting our focus on art and architecture publications.

This kind of book labeling has a long tradition, originating around the same time as the printing press over 600 years ago. This fall, an exhibition at the Gutenberg Museum in Mainz traces the fascinating history from the first printer's marks to the contemporary world of publishing logos. We are delighted not only to be publishing the exhibition catalog in our program, but also to be part of the exhibition with our own logo.

You can discover this book and many other interesting publications in our fall program. I hope you will find them inspiring reads!

Jörg Immendorff's Café Deutschland, Georg Baselitz's Remix paintings, or Joseph Beuys' protest signs – the Viehof Collection is one of the most important private collections in Germany, focusing on German art from the post-war period to the present day. It brings together works by Gerhard Richter and Sigmar Polke, who stand for the audacious, socially critical art of the 1960s, through to the 1980s, marked by artists such as Albert Oehlen and Katharina Sieverding, and extending to 21st-century abstract art, represented by Corinne Wasmuht and Katharina Grosse.

Based on works in the Viehof Collection, the exhibition's accompanying publication presents 24 pioneering positions in German art. This overview provides evidence that individual artistic style has long since surpassed any notion of a national school of art

The book traces the eventful history of a show that took place 70 years ago and marked the international breakthrough for many of the participating artists: Peintures et sculptures non-figuratives en Allemagne d'aujourd'hui at the Cercle Volney, Paris. The private initiative of the Parisian gallery owner René Drouin and his German supporter, Wilhelm Wessel, was an experiment in cultural diplomacy between France and Germany in 1955. The concept was deliberately directed against the canonized view of art promoted by the Deutsche Kunstrat (German Art Council) and leading museum directors, and placed the representatives of the middle and young generations of Art Informel on an equal footing with the established old masters of abstraction.

First publication of the correspondence between Max Slevogt and Bruno Cassirer, comprising approx. 350 written documents

Including a comprehensive index of persons

Current findings of joint cooperative research on Max Slevogt: Landesmuseum Mainz, GDKE; Saarlandmuseum Saarbrücken, Moderne Galerie, and Landesbibliothek Speyer, Landesbibliothekszentrum Rheinland-Pfalz

Artist Max Slevogt and Berlin publisher Bruno Cassirer exchanged letters regularly over many years. The surviving correspondence, comprising around 350 documents, not only reflects their long-standing business friendship and the changes in Slevogt's artistic approach. The letters and postcards also offer many insights into the art trade of the time, the two correspondents' network, and the political events of the late German Empire and the Weimar Republic.

The letters and postcards surviving in the artist's written estate are now being published for the first time, including 53 letters from Slevogt with his characteristic humorous marginal drawings, in a scientifically catalogued and annotated edition – a milestone for the study of classical modernism in Germany.

Max Slevogt, the famous German Impressionist, was acclaimed by his contemporaries as the 'King of Illustration'. This exhibition catalogue is the first to focus closely on his unique collaboration with Berlin's most influential publisher during the Weimar Republic, Bruno Cassirer, which laid the foundations for the artist's future reputation. The majority of Slevogt's extensive and innovative illustrated works were published by Cassirer. The publisher repeatedly encouraged the artist to embark on projects and gave him the freedom to explore new subjects and modern creative approaches. Based on the extensive surviving correspondence between Slevogt and Cassirer, this book also presents several fresh insights into their success and networks, the historical context of their work, and the personal relationship between these two outstanding individuals.

Kunsthalle Mannheim had one of the first collections of Expressionism in Germany's museums – until most of the works previously acquired were confiscated by the National Socialists in 1937. The significance of Expressionism for the museum's history is now being explored for the first time in this catalogue, which presents the outstanding collection of paintings, prints and sculptures, as well as high-quality loans of previously confiscated works and masterpieces from private collections in Mannheim. It includes works by Erich Heckel, Alexej von Jawlensky, Ernst Ludwig Kirchner, Oskar Kokoschka, Otto Mueller, Max Pechstein, Emil Nolde, Karl Schmidt-Rottluff, Maria Uhden, Milly Steger and Gabriele Münter, with a particular focus on sculptor Wilhelm Lehmbruck and his close patron Sally Falk. The publication offers a detailed insight into the history of this fascinating stylistic epoch in Mannheim and introduces important works and their place within the Kunsthalle's collection.

Around 1900, Germany was the main centre for the production of Art Nouveau tiles in Europe. Hallways were regarded as status symbols, and the entranceway became like a calling card. Today, few people are aware that many original tiled walls from that period have been preserved in Berlin. Jugendstil im Quadrat presents 120 fascinating tiles, explains their motifs, and sets them in the context of Art Nouveau ornamentation. The plant theme is particularly widespread: abstract or naturalistic depictions of flowers and trees unfold their full beauty in the square format. This book is the first to document historical Berlin tile paintings, most of which are not listed and therefore at risk.

Nuremberg developed into an international trading center in the heart of Europe between 1300 and 1600. Economy, politics, art, and culture were closely intertwined. This catalog traces the city's expanding networks from the late Middle Ages to the Renaissance and critically reflects on Nuremberg's role in an increasingly globalized world.

The city's success as an international hub of knowledge and an innovative industrial center enabled its cultural flourishing during the time of Albrecht Dürer. However, this prosperity was also built on the exploitation of resources, the booming arms trade, and early colonial activities. This publication sheds light on these lesser-known aspects of Nuremberg's history and presents fascinating objects from international collections.

Holy texts are at the heart of the diverse Jewish cultures; by regular reading of them, Jews all over the world reassure themselves of their community and construct a place of cultural identity beyond the profane. The sacred text not only defines beliefs; it also represents the sensory expression of divine revelation. Using selected manuscripts from the holdings of the Staatsbibliothek Berlin, this volume sheds light on the origin and materiality of the Hebrew Bible, the poetry and musical performance of Jewish liturgical texts, strict rabbinical rules for producing Torah scrolls, and the art of Megillot and Passover Haggadot. The richly illustrated contributions are complemented by explanations of Christian and Muslim scriptural traditions.

The history of book printers, artists and publishers – made clear on the basis of their printer's marks from a previously unknown museum collection

Fascinating case studies from history and the present day, e.g. on the development of the Deutscher Kunstverlag logo

Exhibition

Gutenberg-Museum, Mainz

November 27, 2025 to February 2026

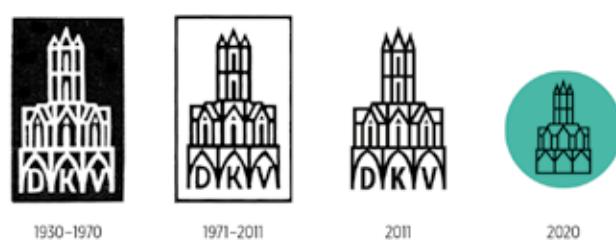

Did Johannes Gutenberg, the inventor of letterpress printing, have a business card? Probably not. However, his successors introduced the so-called printer's mark: predecessor to the publishing logo. These witty, creative 'business cards' have adorned the first or last pages of books since the early days of book printing, identifying the printers responsible. The aim was to showcase and sell both themselves and the printed books. To mark the 625th anniversary of Gutenberg's birth, the Gutenberg Museum Mainz is dedicating a first exhibition to the pictorial genre of printer's marks. The accompanying volume opens up the world of printers and publishers from the beginnings of book printing to the present day, and includes texts on processes in the printing workshop, the printer's job, and specific case studies.

A visual taste experience: an art and cookery book for all the senses

'KUNST ESSEN' is a fascinating illustrated work combining cookery and art, focusing on food as a culturally influential component of art. In 15 chapters, key works of art history from the Middle Ages to the present day are reinterpreted and their creators are presented. Inspired by these paintings, dishes are then produced, and the recipes follow. The dishes are presented as independent, photographically staged works of art, quite unlike conventional serving suggestions! The book combines classic paintings, practical cooking tips, humorous texts, and innovative food photography to create a unique intellectual and sensual pleasure. It has been conceived to whet your appetite for museum visits, cooking, and art itself – whether on canvas, using a camera, or standing at the cooker.

FACTSHEET

When creative people from various disciplines join to form an art-culinary collective, something completely new emerges: people express themselves, take photographs, cook and experiment – passionately flourishing their wooden spoons!

Philipp Weber from Tübingen studied biology and chemistry. His creative repertoire ranges from nutrition and the art of cookery to current issues such as artificial intelligence and democracy.

Inka Meyer, a sociopolitical cabaret artist on the German stage, studied communication design in Mainz and London as well as training as an actor in Munich.

Simon Büttner, a qualified designer, photographer and filmmaker from Cologne, runs the company BRIKETTFILM. He produced the high-quality food photographs for “KUNST ESSEN”.

After studying communication science, psychology and intercultural communication, Marc Christian opened the “MEATINGRAUM” Munich in 2016, where he stages cooking events. He has written cookery books.

Roland Pümmer from Freiburg is a political scientist; he supported the team of authors with text contributions.

For over four decades, Barbara Klemm's impressive black and white photographs for the Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung shaped the collective image of post-war German politics and culture. Her photographs – ranging from iconic moments during the fall of the Berlin Wall in 1989 to haunting portraits of political greats such as Willy Brandt – are far more than just documents of contemporary history. Her unique perspective lent an aura to historical events and people that still resonates today. This book collects together her most important photographs and so demonstrates why Barbara Klemm is regarded as one of Germany's most important contemporary photographers. It offers an outstanding visual testimony to the country's history, captured in images that will endure.

Israeli artist Inbar Chotzen learnt only late in life that some of her ancestors were victims of Nazi persecution. She heard about the history of her Berlin relatives through their estate, which is preserved in the House of the Wannsee Conference. In addition to eight photo albums recording the lives of the parents and four sons between 1920 and 1942, there are 369 postcards sent by deported family members from Theresienstadt camp to their mother in Berlin. Inbar Chotzen approaches these lost lives by painting scenes from their everyday existence on the digitised cards – a silent dialogue with the past. This book presents the artworks and evidence of the persecution on which they are based, together with detailed historical background.

Living intellectual history

Memoirs of an extraordinary couple in art history

Renaissance and baroque art and architecture

28

"What do you do when your husband gets the best job in the country in a field that he stole from you? Well, that's what happened to me, and that's what this book is about." So begins Marilyn Aronberg Lavin's spirited memoir of her seventy-year relationship with Irving Lavin, one of America's most eminent art historians. Her narrative traces their parallel careers as they both achieve remarkable success—he as a distinguished professor at the Institute for Advanced Study, Princeton; she as an award-winning authority on Italian Renaissance painting, iconography, and collectionism. Reflecting on their shared passion for the history of art, Marilyn has crafted a portrait of a partnership, while showing readers how the world of art history can be both intellectually rigorous and emotionally rewarding.

How is art-historical writing stimulated by private collections? Or in other words: what part does the private collection play in art-historical thinking, and how does this become manifest in writing?

Most of Werner Busch's research is devoted to intense work on the object. Quite frequently, it is based on works that are especially familiar to him, as the art historian has amassed a large collection of graphic artworks in particular over his years of academic study, and the collection and his research are closely interrelated.

To mark Werner Busch's 80th birthday, friends and associates have taken a look at some of the objects in the "Busch Collection" and in over 40 contributions, considered how they may relate to his writing, which has been groundbreaking for the discipline.

Dieser zweite Aspekt war im Rahmen von zahlreichen Vorträgen sehr wichtig, so zuletzt während der europäischen Analyse des Zeichnungs Gesamtkatalogs Werner Busch hervorgehoben wurde.

Er gehörte allerdings nicht zu jenen Sammlergruppen an die wir für die Vermehrung des Kapitals aufzurufen haben, sondern zu jenen, die sich auf die eigene Sammlung des Prince-Salopette, ja der Faszination am Kunstobjekt um Werk zu sein. Werner Busch geht immer wieder dynamisch mit der eigenen Sammlung um und den Ansatz, den er daraus gezogen hat, ist eine Art Katalysator für die Entwicklung einer ganz neuen Art von kritischer Forschung. So sollte die Betrachtung im Prinzip in die offizielle Ausstellungseröffnung mit der Käse und ihrem kleinen Käse, um Themen die ihm immer wieder frischen und in vollem Hintergrund verfolgt hat. Eine Frage der Zuschreibung. Die Bekannte von der Seite und der post-revolutionäre Selbstporträt weiblicher Modelle in der französischen Porträtkunst

Ein wunderliches Bild, dass man sich nur schwer merken kann – und doch, die junge Frau bleibt bisher eine Unbekannte. Werner Busch hat die Frau ausgerechnet dem österreichischen Maler Maria Döderlein zugewiesen, aber zunächst stellt sich die Frage wie kommt diese unbekannte Sozialstufe einer jungen Dame in ein Bild, das eigentlich für ein Erbstück und sehr mit anderen Werken französischer Künstler reicher zu sein für einen konservativen Geschmack vorgesehen war? Einmal ist sie eine Frau, die in einem eher okkulten, aber nur mit einzigen konkreten Schlüssen zu entziffernden Maße der Zeit um 1810, ist dann ganz und gar Werner Busch, und nun stellt sich vom Künstler eine Frau dar, die sich nicht als Frau darstellen möchte, sondern als eine Person vor. Wobei die Frage nach der Autorschaft wohl auch deutlich weiter bleibt, weil das Gemälde nicht signiert ist. Eine andere These ist, dass es sich um eine Nachahmung handelt, welche keine Ahnhypothese für Zuschreibung und genauer Datierung (ca. 1810) oder der Freundschaft des Gemäldes liefert. Die Aushandlung an den entsprechenden Älteren und noch jüngeren Geschichtswissenschaftlern ist dringend erforderlich. Werner Busch mit unterschiedlichen Perspektiven und Bergigen Interessiertheiten, hinterfragt jedoch die Zuschreibung, obwohl er sich auf die Autorschaft des Künstlers beruft, ohne die Zuschreibung durch die Autoren ausdrücklich über solche vorliegenden Informationen ergeht und schließlich alle rechtlichen Ergebnissen einer digitalen Jagd durch die zahlreiche Akademie-Bibliothek und darüber hinaus, die er auf der Basis seiner langjährigen Kenntnis und Erfahrung ausreicht.

First systematic theory of intericonicity

Based on image discourses and practices

Interdisciplinary links to art history, philosophy of images, cultural studies, media theory, aesthetics, literature, and media studies

Since the beginning of this millennium, the word "intericonicity" has been used to denote a framework theory describing images' reference to other images by transferring theories of intertextuality to the image. The boom in the use of this term has led to its inclusion in expert jargon and specialized lexicons and its establishment in interdisciplinary contexts, albeit without the backing of theoretically sound art-scientific concepts. In this book, Manuela Bünzow presents the first systematic theory of intericonicity, developed resolutely and consistently from image discourses and practices. It starts from ontological and epistemological foundations that require a completely novel awareness of problems and methods.

What humankind consider to be truths does not enter our world naked. As an ingredient of emotions of religious, cultic or collective orders, art and artists in particular played an important role in the transformation of our world. To be tainted by the stigma of cult and idolatry, such contradictions continue to this day in the dispute over the power of images. Their triumph as a mark of sovereignty goes hand in hand with the trauma they trigger in both individuals and communities. They are attributed a cultic aura and likewise suspected of being a false fetish in a world of globally traded commodities. From antiquity to modernity, these facets and tensions are critically explored in Judaism, Christianity and Islam as well as in philosophical discourses and secular ways of life.

Freud's collection of ancient small-scale sculptures interpreted in light of newly discovered sources

In-depth analysis of Edmund Engelman's photographs of Freud's studies

Sigmund Freud's research into Michelangelo's Moses and the collection of small sculpted figures from Antiquity attest to a visual psychoanalysis that contradicted the reputed iconoclasm of that discipline. Freud himself drew inspiration from items in his collection; but he also incorporated these into the treatment of his patients. What we now know of these aspects of his life and work may serve as a key to a deeper understanding of his theory of the unconscious.

In order to use to best advantage his preoccupation with the visual, Freud was obliged to conceal this aspect of his psychoanalytic method, to "veil" it.

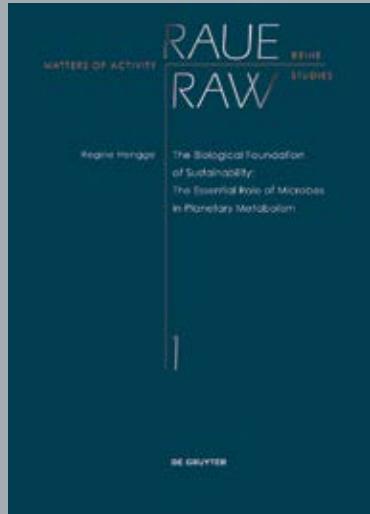

This in itself reveals how far psychoanalysis, as a space of liberation, could nonetheless be subject to cultural constraints, not least the prohibition of images in the Mosaic tradition.

Ecocritical perspectives on art, craft, and design

Reuse and recycling of materials and objects from China

Art and material culture in a global context

The reuse and recycling of materials that were made in China has a short history in the daily activities of private households worldwide, but a long history in art, craft, and design. Focusing on the practices of artists, craftspeople, and designers, and their re-evaluation of unwanted, pre-used, and discarded materials, this volume presents new research on material culture from China, one of the world's leading waste-receiving and waste-producing countries, in a global context. Through the lens of an ecocritical history of art, craft, and design, it studies creative engagements with matter related to aspects of (dis)connectivity, considering how the meanings and values attributed to objects and raw materials can change radically as they travel across historical and cultural divides.

REFLECTING OIL

Artistic research on crude oil

With essays, documentaries, and artistic contributions

As society edges towards a deeper awareness of the decline of fossil fuels as an energy source and the urgent need to reduce the carbon emissions that contribute to global warming, Reflecting Oil presents innovative reflections on crude oil, one of the most important fossil fuels characterising modern life.

Reflections on crude oil in the petroleum sciences and humanities typically take place without direct physical experience of the substance. Reflecting Oil is a collection of arts-based research which entailed practical handling and a holistic observation of the raw substance in the context of petroculture. This mode of research focusing on sensory perceptions and aesthetic and symbolic interpretation provided findings on the levels of multi-sensory and practical knowledge.

Based on current debates in the field of exhibitions, the publication series curating. exhibition theory & practice brings together theoretically grounded analyses of exhibitions and museums, reflects on curatorial practices, and – following the idea of “applied exhibiting” – spaces of action for experimental curatorial strategies.

The series is edited by Martina Griesser, Christine Haupt-Stummer, Renate Höllwart, Beatrice Jaschke, Monika Sommer, Nora Sternfeld, and Luisa Ziaja, and is published as part of the Edition Angewandte.

International perspective on performance-based works with reference to current exhibitions

Linking aesthetic, historiographical, curatorial and conservational perspectives on performance art

Contribution to the current debate on archives and performance

Aesthetic, documentary and historiographical processes are intertwined increasingly in the arts. Relational Acts explores the complex relationships between performance arts, archival processes, and exhibition practices. The contributions to this interdisciplinary volume examine the relationships established via embodied forms of transmission, media-technical methods of documentation, or processes of recording, selection and presentation. Performance practices and their documentation are explored as knowledge-creating, collaborative spheres of action. The authors from the fields of art and science write about the materials, media and concepts of documentation. In doing so, they contribute to a media-theoretical discourse on contemporary art.

DE GRUYTER

Making queer and feminist positions visible in art is an aesthetic strategy with a political impact that marks a transition from a state of invisible impotence to powerful visibility and political relevance. This volume brings together theoretical contributions and artistic interventions by actors in the field of queer and feminist art, addressing the conditions that confront queer and feminist artists in different geographical and temporal contexts. They examine the potential of art exhibitions and art criticism as media of visualization and concealment, and they also explore the possibilities of virtual environments and feminist graphic design, as well as presenting various ways of making marginalized art visible.

Monuments are sites of collective memory – and increasingly, the subject of controversy. Their existence is questioned, individual monuments are being remodelled or toppled, and the meaning attributed to them often changes along with the context. This volume combines different methodological approaches and disciplinary perspectives to analyse the complex dynamics of monument settings, critique and transformations. It examines the setting and toppling of monuments as symbolic acts reflecting power relations, and analyses the scope of iconological, semiotic or metaphor-theoretical perspectives. This book sheds light on creations designed between 1930 and 1964 by the "Verrerie artistique" of Saint-Prex. The works can be found in Swiss public collections today. Founded on an analysis of only recently accessible sources, interviews with former employees or their descendants, and an examination of the works' technical, stylistic, and formal aspects, it presents the first detailed chronology of production. It reveals the reception of international glass art as well as the flourishing contemporary Swiss ceramics in Saint-Prex. The importance of this glassworks in the Canton of Vaud within the context of Swiss glass art is thus emphasized.

In a context of social unrest marked by May 1968, feminist revolt, and the Vietnam War, Italian and Belgian experimental poets drew a cutting-edge roadmap within the eclectic, multilingual context of the European visual poetry phenomenon by creating a unique model of interdisciplinary cooperation, whereby transculturalism, verbovisual research, and social criticism converged. Based on an integrated methodology combining the fields of Visual Arts, Comparative Literature, and Intermedia Studies, this anthology is the first major publication to adopt interartistic and comparative perspectives in order to approach the Italo-Belgian relational axis in the field of international postwar visual poetics with regard to historic avant-gardes, transnational networks, and counterculture poetry magazines.

New research about the visual poetry phenomenon in Italy and Belgium

International perspectives on the transnational networks of European post-war visual poetics

Sigmar Polke's home and place of work, the Gaspelhof in Willich near Düsseldorf, was a meeting place for social and artistic activities, merging art and everyday life in the 1970s. Many well-known works and exhibitions were created here, such as Original + Fälschung. Using new sources and reports from contemporary witnesses, Lucy Degens traces the way that ideas, images and cameras circulated at the Gaspelhof, leading to the production of art in collaboration. She shows that the network Polke brought together there did not reflect the classic categories of artist group or individual, and was thus a challenge to the contemporary art world. She creates a complex picture of Polke's work at the Gaspelhof among a circle of fellow

In 1919, Düsseldorf Art Academy was expanded to partially integrate the School of Arts and Crafts – a milestone for the institution and its aesthetics that still characterises the academy today. Even before the founding of the Weimar Bauhaus, fine and applied arts were first united here and brought to architecture. The academy, associated with the "Düsseldorf

School of Painting", caught up with the latest trends in contemporary art. Modern artists such as Jan Thorn Prikker, Heinrich Campendonk, Paul Klee and Ewald Matare, appointed before and during Walter Kaesbach's time as director, played their part in these developments. This publication focuses on how the caesura did not come about entirely smoothly: the coexistence of tradition and avant-garde led to contradictory yet productive potentials for Düsseldorf Art Academy.

To what extent is art anti-Semitic? What part does anti-Semitism play in the field of art? These questions are more topical than ever – especially since documenta 15 and the recent rise in anti-Semitism linked to the war in Israel and Palestine. The contributions to this volume discuss the significance of anti-Semitism for artists, art theorists, and others in the art world even before the beginning of Nazi rule:

indicating how image programmes, networks and political organisations cultivated and propagated such attitudes. The analysis includes right-wing and nationalist trends, central figures of classical modernism, and the role of anti-Semitism for left-wing artists of the Weimar Republic.

MARIE NEURATH AND ISOTYPE PICTUREBOOKS

TRANSFORMING KNOWLEDGE FOR CHILDREN

Edited by Jörg Meibauer, Susanne Blumesberger and Bettina Kümmerling-Meibauer

Marie Neurath (1898–1986) was an illustrator and graphic designer who created innovative non-fiction books for children. In 1920s Vienna, she developed Isotype (International System of Typographic Picture Education) with her husband, Otto Neurath, and designer Gerd Arntz. Influenced by the progressive ideas of the Vienna Circle, it aimed to contribute to the democratization of knowledge, to make complex scientific relationships accessible to the layperson. Postwar, Marie Neurath created informative picturebooks that expanded Isotype principles. Despite their success, her legacy remains underrecognized. This anthology is the first to elaborate Marie Neurath's achievement as a transformer of knowledge for children

Photo-poems were a feature of German illustrated magazines in the 1920s and 1930s but were later lost in oblivion. The illustrated book FOTOPOESIE presents this popular art form for the first time, with a selection revealing astonishing intermedia creativity: The twenty annotated chapters range from the cycle of the seasons to work, film, sport, transport and advertising to the major themes of love and politics. Great poets such as Mascha Kaléko, Erich Kästner and Joachim Ringelnatz come together with the great photographic artists of their time, including Yva, Umbo and Sasha Stone. Language and photographic poetry combine to create fascinating works of art whose documentation here closes a gap in media and cultural history.

In the mid-1920s, the young artisan Else Stadler-Jacobs from Pasing near Munich began to experiment with textile materials. She was fascinated by bast - a fabric rarely used in handicrafts at that time. Demonstrating huge skill, she designed decorative animal figures that rapidly gained international recognition. As early as 1930 she was delivering her models to department stores in Chicago, San Francisco, London and Budapest.

Daniel Karrasch and Christoph Sauter recount the moving artistic and commercial success of this extraordinary woman, shed light on her artistic roots in Munich in the period after 1900, and reconstruct the complicated production process of her bast animals.

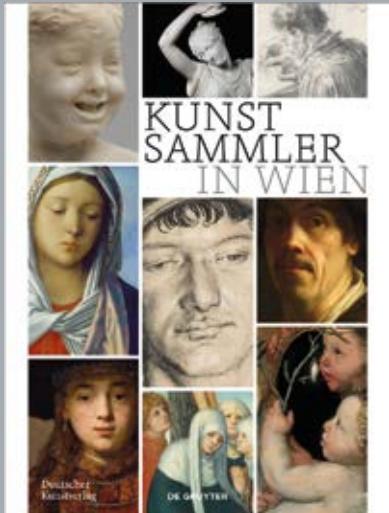

A richly illustrated catalogue section, supplemented with historical photos, uncovers the imaginative world of the "Basto-workshop".

Between 1900 and 1933, many Viennese writers, artists, theater directors and psychoanalysts settled in Berlin, playing a key part in the development of modernism in both cities. The contributions in this volume explore the extent to which a Viennese School developed in Berlin during this period and examine the role of those participating in cultural transfer between Vienna and Berlin. They included writers such as Vicki Baum und Felix Salten, people from the world of theater such as Elisabeth Bergner and Max Reinhardt, designers like Friedl Dicker-Brandeis and Emil Orlik, and scientists like Sigmund Freud and Otto Neurath. Through innovation, they transformed their self-image as "outsiders" into artistic freedom and social utopia.

First comprehensive study on Rrose Sélavy, the alter ego of Marcel Duchamp

Marcel Duchamp was one of the most enigmatic artists of the 20th century. In 1920 he invented an alter ego called Rrose Sélavy, who would become one of the most dazzling characters in modern art. This ground-breaking book is the first to fully explore the complex history of Rrose Sélavy in detail. It takes into account all the relevant works, reconstructs all the historical contexts, and sheds light on Duchamp's artistic attitude in the 1920s. "Known also under the name Rrose Sélavy" (Duchamp), he playfully and ironically mocked the pretensions of the art and artists of his time, friends and foes alike. In Rrose Sélavy, he, who rejected all -isms, took the liberty of creating his own -ism: a self-proclaimed "au-culism". Rrose Sélavy was mocking art.

Milestones of art have been on show in the collection's galleries at the Pinakothek der Moderne Mu-

Besides the largest suite of works by Max Beckmann in Europe, the collection boasts remarkable paintings by Kandinsky, Kirchner, and Picasso, major works by Bacon, Baselitz, and Warhol, photography by the likes of August Sander to Jeff Wall, as well as pieces by contemporary artists working in painting and media art. This volume investigates the positions of women artists, their institutional frameworks, and the role of other female actors in the art world in Ibero-America and on the Iberian Peninsula from the 19th to the late 20th century, focusing especially on the interweaving of post-/decolonial and feminist approaches. Although women artists could not simply act outside existing power systems, they could mirror them in their works – and thereby challenge them. The overlapping of different regimes of subalternity led to specific strategies of self-empowerment, such as the formation of networks. What role does the fact play that both the Iberian Peninsula and the Ibero-American countries were perceived as a cultural “periphery”, although they were simultaneously divided by the colonial wound?

Innovative research on the political dimension of Iranian photography

In Iran, the introduction of photography as developed in Europe rapidly led to the emergence of an independent photographic culture. Jonas Wenger uses the visual motif "labor" to investigate the extent to which local photographers updated existing Orientalist stereotypes when they appropriated the technology. He also examines what rhetorical functions specific visual conventions have had for Iran's internal discourse on internal expansionism, modernity, nationalism and independence. Over a period of seventy years, he reveals how European imperialist claims have intersected with Iranian efforts at nationalization in photographic representations of labor, and shows that European images of Iran overlap with inner Iranian tensions between centre and periphery.

*New perspective on the epoch of What is left when death leaves a void, and the way that we deal with the dead changes? Franca Buss examines the way that Enlightenment debates affected European tombstone art in the 18th century. In an art-historical close reading, she analyzes selected funerary ensembles from Central Europe and England and places them in a broader intellectual-historical context. Four strategies are identified relating to the absence of the deceased in the context of the creation of memory, and hope of the afterlife: allegorizing, sentimentalization, poetizing and naturalization. The modern self-narrative of repressing death is questioned and it is demonstrated how art will pursue its own logic of development defying teleological generalizations.

Innovative study of the world's largest collection of self-portraits in Florence

The "Galleria degli Autoritratti" in the Uffizi, Florence, is the largest collection of artists' self-portraits in the world. It was founded in 1650 by Leopoldo de' Medici, and his heir Cosimo III expanded and reorganized it. Assisted by a network of agents and guided by empirical research criteria, the two patrons acquired only genuine self-portraits. The outcome was a unique, special collection closely linked to the epistemological approaches of the 17th century. Anna Maria Jonietz is the first to analyze the art-theoretical and academic-historical aspects of the "Galleria." Paulus Potter can be regarded as one of the most famous Dutch animal painters. For the first time in his work, animals were the protagonists; as a rule, human beings played only a subordinate role. Potter's works were sought-after during his lifetime and fetched high prices, especially in the 18th century. According to the first catalogue in 1783, Kassel Picture Gallery owned no fewer than ten paintings by the artist, who died young. No other collection had more of his works. However, many of them were lost during the Napoleonic occupation. The successful re-acquisition of Paulus Potter's "Watermill" offers an opportunity to examine the Kassel gallery's eventful history and shed light on Potter's significance as an animal painter.

The “Rifle Gallery” in the “long corridor” of Dresden’s Royal Palace presents around 500 unique handguns from the collections of the Saxon electors and kings. The magnificent rifles and pistols from the 16th to 19th centuries were used for hunting, target shooting and courtly representation. The new museum guide presents the history of the collection as well as the architecture and furnishings of the Lange Gang. With its ancestral gallery, the approximately 100-metre-long Renaissance building embodied the dynastic memorabilia of the ruling family and housed the elector’s “personal rifle” from 1733. A richly-illustrated selection of objects presents a journey through three centuries of European gunsmithing and decorative art; the exhibits are elucidated in their complex cultural and historical contexts.

This book presents a first comprehensive tribute to Daniel Neuberger, who worked as a sculptor, painter, stone cutter and writer and achieved his greatest mastery in wax bossing, the art of sculptural moulding using wax. His delicate works, often measuring only a few centimetres, were particularly sought after by the royal courts of Europe.

The book sheds light on Neuberger's activities at the imperial court in Vienna between 1650 and 1663, where he worked for Emperor Ferdinand III and his sons. It features two of his most important works, a 60-part cycle of the Metamorphoses after Ovid and an allegorical depiction of the death of Emperor Ferdinand III. Supplemented by a art-historical and conservation

A first comprehensive study of Pierre Belon’s bird treatise from 1555

New perspective on research practices in the early modern period

66

Pierre Belon's treatise on birds, published in Paris in 1555, is regarded as a pioneering early work of ornithology. Christine Kleiter analyzes this work in its exceptional position as one of the first printed and illustrated natural history treatises. She shows how the text and images pursue the claim to systematically document and catalog knowledge. In doing so, she compares Belon's work with that of other naturalists, such as Conrad Gessner and Ulisse Aldrovandi. It becomes clear that Belon drew on a variety of sources – from living and dead animals to specimens and drawings – and depicted some animals that had never been seen or described before in Europe. This volume thus offers a completely new insight into the research practices of the early modern period.

First comprehensive examination of the talisman from an art-historical perspective

Innovative contribution to Kunstkammer research

New perspectives on the early modern understanding of images and art

Talismans are objects much neglected by art historical research to date. This volume is the first to present such magical artefacts as a highly complex and extremely promising object genre in terms of visual studies, which can be discussed in the context of recent discourses such as material cultural studies, object studies, and the question of the agency of artistic works. Based on the Kunstkammer of Habsburg Emperor Rudolf II in Prague, who was the most important collector of naturalia, artificialia and scientifica around 1600, Kunstkammer objects will also be considered as magica: artefacts to which a natural magical quality could be attributed due to their iconographic and material preparation or artistic craftsmanship.

The “figure” is a key category of early modern art. Following on from its theoretical delineation in ancient philosophy, the rhetorical potential of the “figure” – which co-determined its iconographic reception, its “vivacità”, and also its virtual dimension – underwent a significant reactivation in the visual arts of the early modern period. The authors reveal fresh perspectives on the pictorial figure at that time by analysing its semiotic significance in relation to the artistic material and the interrelationship between mental representation and material formulation. They analyse formal, functional and reception-aesthetic aspects of pictorial structures in the context of the period, and thus contribute to a differentiated understanding of the figure-ground constellation in the early modern era.

First visual history of falconry

A case Study of a global art history

New research on a complex human-animal interaction

Falconry, the cultural technique of hunting using falcons, hawks or even eagles, is more than a form of hunting or sport: it is also a visual practice with immense aesthetic appeal. Since its inception, falconry has been associated with political representation worldwide. Yannis Hadjinicolaou explores the ways in which falconry's political iconology and its practice as a cultural technique are connected. He traces the art of falconry world-wide, from late antiquity to the present day, focusing his study on the early modern period. He demonstrates how the transfer of functions, motifs and meanings, and the (physical) movement of artistically designed objects, but also of the falcons themselves or the instruments of falconry, still connect countries and continents today.

First detailed study of the history of the Lateran Basilica in the 16th century

New insights into the Roman Curia and the papacy

Innovative perspectives on the cultural history of Roman ecclesiastical government

This book offers new insights into the history of Rome's Basilica of San Giovanni in Laterano through the perspective of curial ceremony. It traces the probable contribution by the eminent Oratorian and cardinal, Cesare Baronio, in designing a sophisticated iconographic program for the transept inside this prominent Roman church edifice during Clement VIII's (Aldobrandini's) pontificate. Moreover, the book provides the first full reconstruction of the history and curial interventions at the ancient Constantinian Patriarchum Lateranensis during the second half of the 16th century on the basis of hitherto unknown documents from Roman and other Italian archives and libraries.

Preserved between the covers of books, textiles offer a remarkable glimpse into how the local production of books was connected to vibrant global trade networks from late antiquity through the early modern period. Textiles appear in manuscripts in many forms: as a delicate overlay used to adorn or protect a precious painted illumination; as silk robes wrapping sacred texts; as the sturdy fabric that supports an intricately sewn binding; as a repurposed bit of cloth, taken from a liturgical vestment, concealed within the volume to convey sacrality. This volume takes a unique interdisciplinary approach to examining the widespread use of textiles in books and manuscripts, ranging from practical uses to the ornamental and be-

Discusses the materiality of medieval history-writing from various methodological and disciplinary perspectives

Foregrounds the role of manuscript makers in medieval historiography

Covers Western European materials from the ninth to the sixteenth century in Latin and various vernaculars

This volume explores the role of manuscripts in conveying history to medieval and early modern readers. Manuscript makers "made" history through layout, rewriting, illumination, compilation, script choice, and annotation, giving history-writing its material dimension. Adopting a broad view of "history," it argues that manuscripts' material features shaped historical narratives and defined history conceptually, making their creators play an instrumental role in history-writing alongside authors. The ten chapters analyze Western European sources (9th to 16th c.), linking case studies like 13th-c. Corbie and 15th-c. Zurich to broader history-writing strategies. The book therefore situates history-writing in its material form and invites us to consider premodern historiography in its medium.

In the prayer book of Margaretha von Kappel (1482), texts and images form a close unity: the images structure the text compilation, blur the compilatory text boundaries and thus make the contents of the prayer book appear as an overall composition. The miniatures trace the liturgical year and focus on the life and suffering of Jesus as part of the history of salvation. They offer viewers visual anchors for private devotion and enable a more direct relationship with God. By means of various realisation strategies, the story of salvation is repeatedly transposed into the present of those praying, in order to come to pass once again. This study explores the prayer book and analyses the conception of the texts and images as a whole.
